The current situation like COVID-19 pandemic has created many challenges for banks in delivering services while protecting most important resources – employees. While Information and Cyber Security have been the top most concern for organisations worldwide, the pandemic situation has introduced additional risks due to changes adopted to face this situation. Cyber hygiene has become as important as personal hygiene for today's organisations.

As we are aware, last few years have witnessed unprecedented growth of mobile and internet supported technologies that have greatly helped banks in offering various cashless solutions to the customers with a great deal of efficiency and ease of use. These services have been proved to be blessing in current situation. However, this has also presented additional opportunities to criminals who are targeting certain weaknesses in the system and attacking either the banks or individuals resulting in the rise of cybercrimes, particularly online frauds. With the rapidly changing technology and related security threats, it is vital for banks to know the nuances of cyber security, various types of threats, the risks arising from them and the ways of detecting/protecting them.

Given this perspective and to maintain the social distancing, NIBM is pleased to offer a complete online training Programme on "Cyber Security" for the officials from Information Security, Information Technology and IS Audit department. This programme would offer insight into all elements of Cyber Security and would further cover the broad list of topics as mentioned below.
