Programme on Implementing IT Governance and Measuring Benefits from IT Investments

Banks in India have invested heavily in Information Technology as a part of business strategy. The question is “Does it give back the expected returns?” It is a known fact that measuring benefits from IT is a challenging task; however, since banks work in numbers, translating qualitative returns is much difficult. The Reserve Bank of India (RBI) guidelines expect banks to implement IT governance framework using internationally accepted IT governance standards and framework (e.g. ISO 38500 and COBIT 5). Measuring benefits from IT and related services is one of the requirements of IT governance, which many organisations find it difficult.

The programme is aimed at discussing how to implement IT governance covering requirements of ISO 38500 and COBIT 5. The programme also discusses how to develop and implement a model to build metrics that can help banks in measuring direct and indirect benefits from IT.

Objectives

Target Group
