Programme in Compliance Functions in Banks

Background

The importance of compliance in banks is increasing. Both banks as well as the Regulators emphasize it. New regulations are indeed creating new compliances, challenges and risks. Banks have to comply with provisions of various acts as applicable to them, besides the Banking Regulation Act, banks have to understand and comply with various legislation and guidelines relevant to them. Certain compliance also arises on account of listing agreement and insurance activities.

Therefore, banks have to develop business lines and take decisions keeping in mind the compliance. This will help them to reduce risk. Risk faced by banks are on the rise and how well these risks are managed and understood will be the key driver behind profitability and sustenance of the banks in long run.
