Programme on Digital Marketing in Banking

Technological innovations implore the transition from traditional marketing to digital marketing. Internet has changed the way we communicate, learn, disseminate information and conduct our day to day work. Customer expectations of banking services are changing very rapidly and are influenced by convenience and savvy digital experiences provided by other service providers like retailers, entertainment industry, modern platform based business like transportation, travelling and entertainment. The ecosystem characterized by Fin Tech, smartphones, wallets, POS, UIDAI, molds the customer desires to more personalized, contextual, fast and cutting edge financial solutions from banks. In order to match the pace of impact of digital technology on customer and the ecosystem, banks have started offering and innovating digital products and services.

All these developments, pave the way towards better marketing approach by banks. At all stages of marketing, right from acquisition, up to retention, service and checking attrition, banks have opportunities offered by the digital technologies, to perform better by virtue of digital technologies. But at the same time there is a need to reorient the marketing practices to successfully benefit from the said developments and build a brand that appeals to tech savvy digital customer base.

Digitalization has provided means to attain, engage and make customers the advocates of banking brand. The treasure trove of customer information fuels the analytics based marketing decisions to enable efficient targeting, segmentation, response, cross sell and upsell. Structural and social bonds created by digital marketing strategies lead to higher loyalty and better customer profitability.

In this backdrop, it becomes imperative for banking organization to strengthen their digital marketing initiatives in quest for competitiveness and customer centricity goals.

This Programme on Digital Marketing in Banking aims to equip participants with information about emerging digital marketing
