Programme on Implementing IT Governance and Measuring Benefits from IT Investments

Banks in India have invested heavily in Information Technology (IT) as a part of their business strategy. The question is: Does it give back the expected returns? It is a known fact that measuring benefits from IT is a challenging task; however, since banks work in numbers, translating qualitative returns is quite difficult. The programme is aimed at discussing a model to build metrics that can provide indications on returns from IT using various standards like ISO 38500, framework like COBIT 5 and guidelines from the Reserve Bank of India (RBI). Discussions shall cover RBI guidelines for IT governance, IT security, IS audit, cyber frauds and continuity, discussions with various participants to understand current process, need for implementing governance process for compliance as well as effective technology management.

Objectives

To discuss how to implement IT governance in banks and how measuring return from IT can help banks in developing business and IT strategies.

Target Group

Senior management involved in IT strategic decisions and IT heads/senior managers.

Pedagogy

Presentations, discussions and case studies.

Content

The course covers the following topics:

- IT governance requirements (benefits realisation, risk optimisation and resource optimisation) and implementation challenges.
- IT governance standards and frameworks – ISO 38500 and COBIT 5.
- What it requires to measure benefit realisation from IT? How to develop service metrics for achieving objectives?
- Understanding different business areas that depend on IT.
- Aligning business area objectives with IT objectives.
- Developing metrics for each business area (CBS, ADC, payment systems, treasury, etc.).
